Workplace giving is transforming lives

Friends,

Without the dedication of the region's companies and their employees, we would not be able to build brighter futures for those in need.

Donors in workplaces across Saint John, Kings and Charlotte are transforming lives and building stronger, more compassionate communities.

The spirit of giving – and the remarkable stories of those who have benefitted from that generosity – will be on full display on Sept. 12 at noon at the Delta in Saint John as we launch our 2024 campaign. (To grab your tickets before they are gone, go online today.)

Workplace campaigns are essential to our success.

Richard's story: Navigating safety at home for

seniors

As people age, the security they feel from living in their own homes as long as possible is crucial to maintaining their independence.

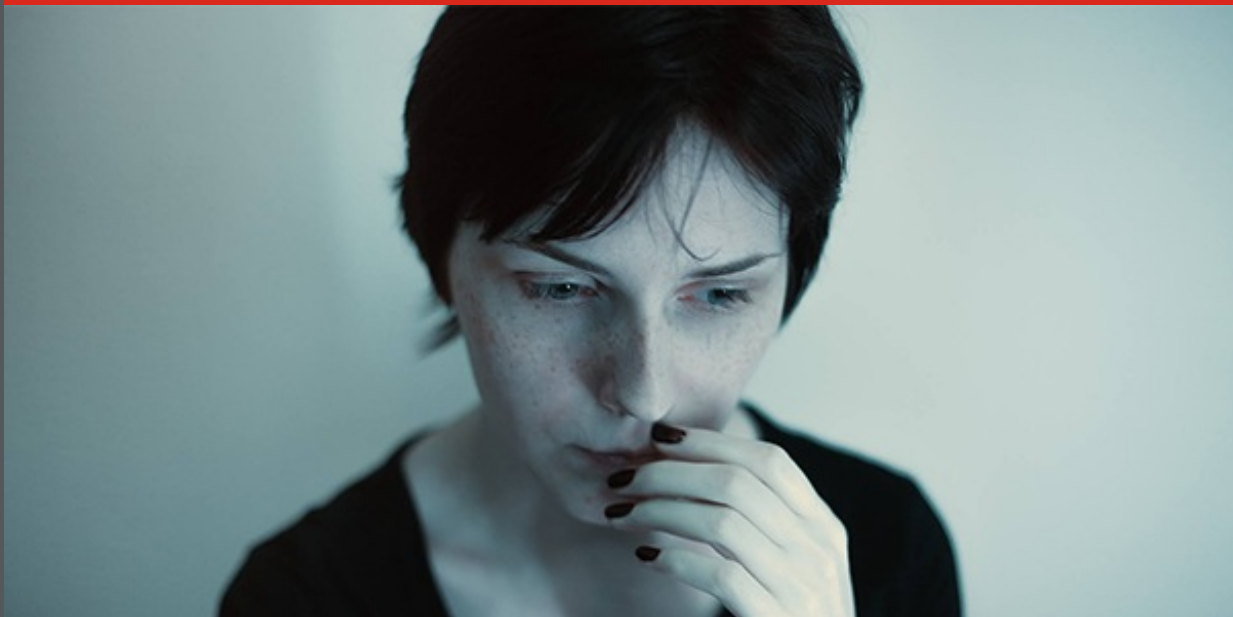

For many, that wouldn't be possible without 211 service navigators.

Take the case of Richard, who has mobility challenges and lives alone. He called 211 after injuring himself at home.

Imagine Richard's sense of helplessness and fear about his future safety in his own home. But thanks to the service navigator he spoke to, he got the help he needed to enhance his safety.

Sandra's story: Abusive relationship left her feeling alone

Growing up in a loving family and surrounded by good friends, no one knew that Sandra was in an abusive relationship.

"I did not recognize the abuse until it escalated, and I knew that I had to leave," she says.

Feeling scared and alone, Sandra didn't want to leave her home when she went to Second Stage Safe Haven, a United Way funded partner that provides housing and support to women and their children who have fled domestic violence.

#LOCAL LOVE FACT

United Way Saint John, Kings and Charlotte supports two local organizations, Second Stage Safe Haven and Hestia House, to help break the cycle of intimate partner violence for women and families in our region.

Investing in kids' futures: Funded partners making a difference

Giving children and youth a chance to achieve their potential is a big part of what we do.

It's why we invested more than $900,000 in nearly 40 youth programs over the last two years.

“Investing in the future of our children is important for their well-being today, but it also helps them build brighter futures tomorrow,” says Alexya Heelis, Executive Director of the United Way Saint John, Kings and Charlotte.

“The programs we help fund also break cycles of generational poverty, an obstacle facing many kids who want to be all they can be. These programs put them on a path to achieve their ambitions.”
